2. The method declaration contains the first line of the method, which contains the method name, access level, return type, and parameters, if any. The method body contains the statements that implement a method.

3. Public

4. Visibility

5. I believe that var4 would start as 0 but then get added to to become 1, var3 I believe would begin at 1 and get added to once to become 2. I believe that variable 2 would start at 0 and go through numbers 0 to 4 and end at 4.

6. a) Public static int getVowels (string str)

b) public static int extractDigit(integer int)

c) public static string insertString (string str, integer int)

7. a) the method declaration/signature

b) yes but they have to have different method declarations/signatures

8. a) used to exit the method and return to the main code or to transfer a calculated result back to the calling code.

b) only 1.

c) the code would state a data type if it's returning, if not returning it uses the data type void.

9. I think the part thats wrong is that it uses a return statement and a void statement for doSomething.

11. a) true
b)false
c)false
d)false
e)
f)false
g)true
h)false
i)true
j)true
k)false
l)false